

Life in the Restylane

The dermatologist and the plastic surgeon have found a way to make it work.

Young doctors in love: Born and Airan say they'll continue to swap weekends in each other's towns

Trevor Born – Toronto's surf ready party-must-have body remodeller – and that gorgeous New York society skin whiz, Lisa Airan, are engaged. And they're celebrating by appearing in the latest Vogue!

Born and Airan, who have been an item since 2002, arm-candying it together on both sides of the border, made it official over the summer. More recently they upped the glam quotient by posing together in Anna Wintour's fashion bible. "Dream team," says the photo caption.

Not only, it seems, are these two collaborating on marital bliss, but the docs have co-written a very important paper entitled "Non-Surgical Lower Eyelid Lift," appearing soon in the journal Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery. (Not found in the same section on the newsstand as In Touch, I assure you.)

The paper is about Restylane, an "injectible filler made of hyaluronic acid," according to the mag. One that's "commonly used to plump up fine lines" under the eyes and on other parts of the face.

For Trevor and Lisa, their courtship has been very much wine and Restylane. The two met when the star dermatologist, who has twice appeared on Oprah, arranged a meeting with Born to discuss the procedure, and they later traveled together to D.C. when Born testified before the FDA during approval hearings for the substance. (It's since been given the go-ahead.)

So how did the engagement come about? Born told me about it the other day. It happened on July 2. In Napa Valley. In a hot-air balloon!

"She had no idea," says Born, who was married once before.

Twenty-five minutes into the ride, the surgeon asked his sweetie to look a certain way, and there, in the distance, was a big sign he'd arranged that read: "Lisa, will you marry me?"

The celebration was capped with Champagne. Dom Perignon, of course. And this weekend they're off to Paris to choose just the right ring. Talk about Romancing the Stone.

So when's the big date? Born won't say for sure, but spring is what others are chanting, probably back in Napa Valley. Though paring down the guest list is going to be one tricky exercise, given Born's contacts here and Lisa's world in New York, where she's a darling among fashion designers and on all the glitzy guest lists.

And will they continue to be a cross-border act, swapping weekends in each other's towns? When I had brunch with them at Avenue Road's Cantine a few weeks back, that was certainly the impression I got. Which means one thing: Both New York and Toronto get ownership of a new glamour couple. (And they said free trade wouldn't work!)

In Toronto, me thinks, these two pose serious competition for newlyweds Galen and Alexandra Weston, the town's other new super-hot duo.
